The attached document has no signature due to the electronic assignment of rights through Sony Corporation's Patent Management System - an internal Web interface - known as "SoPRANO". However, we believe the document represents an employment agreement, because now legally incapacitated inventor Kenta Yamaguchi assigned his rights to the present invention by following the necessary steps on SoPRANO for assigning his rights.

Generally, inventors of Sony Corporation assign their rights of ownership to Sony Corporation for all inventions in all countries, including patent, utility model and design, as well as trademarks, by completing an electronic assignment contract using SoPRANO, in the order outlined below:

- (1) One of the inventors electronically submits an invention report to Sony's Intellectual Property Division using "SoPRANO", and SoPRANO provides all of the inventors with a workflow requiring assignment of their rights to Sony Corporation. The, the following is displayed on SoPRANO; "I have assigned all of the right to receive the patent, utility model, design or trade-marks in all the countries of the world including Japan to your company about the above invention, design or creation."
- (2) When the inventor(s) consents to the assignment, the proceed with assigning their rights to Sony Corporation on SoPRANO.
- (3) After the above process is completed, SoPRANO automatically creates an assignment document.
